Communiqué de presse:

Elodie Seguin explore depuis ses débuts les manières d'appréhender la peinture, nourrie de réflexions sur la représentation.

Elle produit peu de pièces et travaille sous la forme d'une recherche permanente et le moment de l'exposition vient arrêter ou « figer » la recherche pour la formaliser, avant de la poursuivre à nouveau selon une approche expérimentale. En ce sens, l'atelier est davantage un laboratoire qu'un lieu de production.

Voici ce qu'Elodie écrit en préambule, dans un échange avec Marie-Cécile Burnichon:

« Ainsi l'emploi des mots en bloc pour ce titre introduit l'idée de duplication et de superposition, de couches qui arrêtent un aller-retour dans l'intention de définir le travail (peinture ou sculpture?), comme l'exposition fige le travail pendant un moment donné.

Cette question d'unité, d'épaisseur, de couche se rejoue aussi dans les pièces que je vais montrer comme tu pourras peut-être le sentir avec les simulations ou vues d'atelier.

Ce titre précise mes préoccupations principales qui sont classiques et se situent dans l'ambiguïté entre ces deux disciplines.

Cela aurait aussi pu être quoi peindre et comment le peindre?

La peinture telle que je l'emploie fait le dessin de ce qu'elle recouvre, les éléments peints représentent ce qu'ils sont.

La peinture permet ainsi de désigner et d'engager des surfaces en ne faisant qu'un avec elles, en ce sens la peinture fait lieu.

La sculpture est une couleur, un volume, une position, une superposition, plusieurs points de vue. »

Superpositions, formes réduites et minimales, couleur, lumière, le travail d'Elodie Seguin s'intègre dans une architecture existante et vient y souligner les creux et les volumes ainsi que les propriétés du lieu.

Cette exposition convoque des formes identifiables, que l'on peut précisément nommer: résistance, lingot, lampe, miroir. L'artiste utilise une ellipse, ce sont des « formes-mots », qui désignent des propriétés immatérielles autant que des objets. L'artiste évoque ainsi la difficulté de s'abstraire de toute image, la tautologie questionne les limites de la représentation qui oppose abstraction et figuration.

L'exposition, au sens photographique, comme celui performatif de l'accrochage, est une composante essentielle de l'activation des œuvres.

Peinture cherche le mur est accrochée en diagonale, activant le faisceau de la lampe-torche, Dos au mur met en lumière une relation physique et corporelle aux œuvres, pour lesquelles le mur qui leur fait face est laissé vide, comme pour accueillir le dos du visiteur.

« La peinture sort de ses gonds » dit Elodie Seguin, parce qu'elle échappe aux conventions et aux usages qui régissent les accrochages traditionnels, elle est un volume.

Press Release:

Elodie Seguin has, right from the start, been exploring the ways of grasping what painting is, based on her reflexions about depiction.

She produces little work and instead focuses on a constant investigation, until the moment of exhibiting rounds off or “fixes” it, thus formalising it, before it picks up again in an experimental way. In this respect, a studio is more like a laboratory than a production site.

This is what Elodie has written as an introduction, in conversation with Marie-Cécile Burnichon:

“So it is that the use of words brings in the idea of duplication and superimposition, or layers that freeze a toing and froing, with the intention of defining work (painting or sculpture?), just as a show freezes work during a given time.

This question of unity, depth, or layers, is also being played out in the pieces I’m going to display, as you might feel from simulations or studio shots.

This title pinpoints my main preoccupations, which are classic, and are placed in the ambiguity between these two disciplines.

This could also have been what to paint, and how to paint?

Painting as I practise it draws out what it covers, the painted elements just depicting what they are.

Painting thus means being able to draw and invest surfaces while being one with them, and in this respect painting makes space.

Sculpture is a colour, a volume, a position, a superimposition, several points of view.”

With superimpositions, reduced and minimal forms, colour, and light, Elodie Seguin’s work fits into an existing architecture while bringing out its hollows and volumes, as well as the properties of place.

This exhibition convokes identifiable forms, which can be precisely named: a resistance, an ingot, a lamp, a mirror. The artist uses an ellipse, or “word-forms” which stand for immaterial proprieties just as much as objects. The artist thus evokes the difficulty of abstracting oneself from any image, with this tautology questioning the borders of depiction, opposing abstraction and figuration.

The exhibition, in its photographic sense, as in the performative action of hanging a picture, is an essential part of the activation of works.

Peinture cherche le mur (“Painting Looking for the Wall”) is hung diagonally, turning on the beam of a torch, Dos au mur (Back to the Wall”) highlights a physical and bodily relationship with artworks, for which the opposing wall has been left empty, as though welcoming the visitors’ backs.

“Painting is unhinged,” says Elodie Seguin, because it escapes from the conventions and customs that govern the traditional hanging of pieces; it works as a volume.

Sliced Paintings : Everything is in everything

11 Juin -30 Juillet, 2017

Solo show, Gallery Daniel Marzona

Press release

Daniel Marzona is pleased to announce our collaboration with Elodie Seguin (*1984, Paris). Her first solo-exhibition in Berlin will open on June 10 at 6pm.

Elodie Seguin has defined a unique approach to painting which explores the relationship between several painted objects as well as their organization within and their relation to the given exhibition space. Oftentimes the elements of her works, consisting of materials such as wood, paper, MDF, or cardboard, are not joined together but are simply placed on top of or next to each other, leaning on the gallery walls or carefully placed directly on the floor of the exhibition space. Usually we find the single surfaces of these elements painted in somewhat unique monochromatic colors which are not easy to categorize, tending to oscillate between red and orange, yellow and ochre, blue and grey, etc., and always subtly balanced against each other. In its reductivist tendencies Seguin's work reveals an obvious affinity to the minimalist tradition. At the same time her theoretical and phenomenological interest in color as a dimension of perception links her approach to a modern tradition of painting which began with Mondrian and Malevich and found its continuation with artists like Truitt, Newman, Palermo, McCracken and others.

For her exhibition at Daniel Marzona Elodie Seguin wrote the following notes:

«I did 40 independent works but they will have a dialogue with each other because of their number, color and their modular aspect.

I painted the "slices" as the surfaces with a lot of care in order to make them appear with the same quality and to produce a volume of color.

I tried to play with the immateriality of color, making a drawing of the element it overlays.

I tried to reveal an ambiguity between plains and edges, extending the surface as a pedestal because of its thickness.

I cut hundreds of small pieces of wood, activating them as leftovers of a history of painting, everything mixing, interlocking, and influencing itself.

Everything is at a human scale in order to be easily manipulated.

Elements are most of the time simply laid one on top of the other. The only ones stuck together and finished into a final state are the simple compositions which hang as canvases.

The color becomes an evocative volume depending on its dimensions and how it is confronted.

Green will be missing.

There is a spontaneous, experimental dimension to my process, building and conceiving the exhibition during the painting itself, by trial and error. "There is a logic to every mistake."

I did everything myself, by hand. I don't use power tools. I find and mix the colors, sand the wood, paint and lacquer all the surfaces.

I know the type of surface I want to manipulate, but I need observation and study to develop a sensitivity, to enable accidents, and potentially to catch the materials in different states.

I hope this way of working will be visible in the exhibition.

My first line of thought was to question painting by manipulating the color as an object to be confronted.»

Fertile Lands

25 janvier -9 mars, 2016

Fondation Ricard, Paris, France

commissarié par Alexandra Fau.

avec Lara Almarcegui, Rosa Barba, Sophie Bonnet-Pourpet, Cyprien Gaillard, Tacita Dean, Nicolas Floc'h, Vincent Lamouroux, Seth Price, Samir Ramdani, Michael Riedel, Elodie Seguin et Pieter Van der Schaaf

Communiqué de presse

Fertile Lands appelle des terrains propices, au contact desquels l'art d'aujourd'hui trouverait les moyens de se régénérer. Les œuvres de l'exposition à la Fondation d'entreprise Ricard convoquent les forces brutes de la nature. Elles captent l'énergie du soleil venu « toucher » les objets fossiles (What it Does to Your City) de Cyprien Gaillard, ou le papier solarisé tendu à bout de bras par Sophie Bonnet-Pourpet (Insolation à Uxmal, Yucatan, (A shadow offering to Virginia) 2012), en pleine fin du monde promise par le calendrier Maya. Dans le film Styx (2016) de Samir Ramdani, l'archéologue en personnage maléfique opère une fission de la matière par diffraction de la lumière. Ces forces vives consomment l'art dans son incarnation ultime - l'objet marchandise.

Qu'ils aient fait le choix ou non de l'atelier, tous les artistes de l'exposition Fertile Lands s'inventent des territoires propres à l'expérimentation qu'exigent leurs pièces.

Elodie Seguin investit l'écart physique et mental produit entre deux réalités spatiales complémentaires, autonomes, affranchies de l'espace d'exposition qui les accueillent (Trappe claire et Trappe obscure, 2016). Chacune ouvre sur un vide, perçu comme dépassement de toute limitation. Fermée, elle est ouverte. Ouverte, elle est fermée.

Fertile Lands se situe dans cet horizon indéterminé où tout peut advenir. Là où la pensée de l'artiste commet de brusques sursauts, replis ou mises en perspectives, avant de finalement tout renverser et réévaluer sous un angle différent. Oser parler d'intimité créatrice, c'est conter l'ineffable. Imaginez ce qui a bien pu se passer dans la tête de Robert Smithson, parti sur les traces de sa propre histoire à Passaic, un livre de Brian Aldiss sous le bras. Fertile Lands est le fruit d'une cristallisation d'idées, de sensations, d'expériences qui la traversent. Fertile Lands is Elsewhere

Oltremare

March 23 - May 31, 2013

Vistamare, Pescara, Italy

Curated by Luca Cerizza

Ultramarine ['oltremare'] is a deep blue pigment that was once obtained, via a complex process, from the semi-precious stone lapis lazuli.

It was used by the ancient Egyptians, then in the painted temples of sixth- and seventh-century Afghanistan and, later, in Chinese and Indian art: Italian artists began to use it in the middle ages. In the 1400s Cennino Cennini extolled its qualities: "Ultramarine blue is a noble colour, pure and perfect beyond all others; its qualities excel anything that can be said of it or done with it". The name derives from its place of origin, the Orient: the pigment arrived in Europe via the ports of Syria, Palestine and Egypt, lands which were "across the sea".

Among the most precious of the colours used in Italian painting, ultramarine was only ever applied to frescoes "a secco" [as a final layer applied once the fresco plaster is dry], as was the case, for example, in Giotto's paintings in the Scrovegni Chapel in Padua. Since 1825 the name ultramarine has been used to describe a manmade pigment of the same colour. From the late 1970s onwards the word also begins to appear in many of the titles that Giovanni Anselmo gives to his work: for Anselmo it alludes both to the blue that he uses and to the geographical and metaphorical idea of "across the sea". A work like Mentre oltremare verso mezzanotte appare ['Whilst Across the Sea, Towards Midnight, It Appears', or 'Whilst Ultramarine Appears Towards Midnight'] (1979-2012) consists, for example, of a rectangle of ultramarine paint applied directly on to the surface of the wall. As Anselmo himself remarked, "... the stimulus it offers is not only visual, but also mental; it points to a place beyond the walls of the gallery, a place towards which both the artworks and the viewer are moving. It is, in any case, a place that exists, because anywhere you go there will always be somewhere further 'across the sea'" Physical and metaphorical, tangible and imaginary, the doubling of meanings inherent in the word "ultramarine" is the conceptual basis for this exhibition, which brings together artists of diverse generations and nationalities. The natural landscape and the ways in which we perceive, represent and imagine it offers the starting point for reflections on the relationship between the individual and the environment, the possibilities and limits of perception and imagination, the dialectical relationship between direct experience and representation.

The profound transformation that the last few decades have wrought in our very idea of nature and the way in which we view it is the stuff against which we measure the boundaries and judge the character of our identity and the different approaches of the artists on show.

Another element common to these artists is their use of a 'language' that is decidedly minimalist.

Whether they 'use' drawing, sculpture, installations or photography, they all reduce their vocabulary to an essential minimum, and do so thanks to the most direct of possible relationships with their materials, and gestures that are characterized by an extreme linguistic rigour and simplicity of forms.

Most of the works on show (a combination of new work and older pieces) are impressions, samplings, shifts in and juxtapositions of materials, objects and images.

However, this succinct approach, which aims for a predominantly abstract and non-iconic language, is not in any way that of traditional minimalism.

Beyond the surfaces and around the apparently silent and image-free materials and forms that make up the exhibition, there multiply questions, narrative possibilities and emotional and figurative suggestions.

Art Statements 2012

June 14 - June 17, 2012

Art Basel, Switzerland

press release:

For Art Statements, we are pleased to propose a gesture by the gallery program's youngest artistic position, Elodie Seguin. Elaborating on what she refers to as "construction, intention and perception," Elodie Seguin proposes an installation which is also a sculpture, one that reveals the very instant when fragments and fragmentality suddenly become a globality, a totality.

Construction:

For her project, Elodie Seguin requires a simple booth with white walls in which she plans to divide lengthwise into two parts by the construction of a long glass wall. On one side of the booth (the left side), which is inaccessible to the public due to the glass division, Elodie Seguin proposes to place pieces of wood and paper of different shapes and sizes against the far wall. Layered vertically against the wall as though stacked against the wall in her studio, these pieces of wood and paper take the appearance of the artist's own work material. Generally qualified as "potentialities" by Elodie Seguin, these materials could easily be stored in a similar way in her art studio, like bits works not yet assembled or realized. These placed materials will be visible to public as it enters the doorway, which is located in the right-hand space of the booth. On the wall directly facing the booth door, the viewer discovers a wall painting painted à plat. Firstly, there is a large square of pink that, beginning at the floor, covers the exact amount of space as the materials that are placed on the same wall, yet located on the other side of the glass. A blue color partially covers the top of the pink square. Like a painting stacked behind another, the blue appears as though emerging like a layer from behind the square of pink. Above this, the wall is completely white.

Intention:

The role of the glass wall, which divides the room into two parts and restricts the viewer's point of view to only one side of the booth, also reflects the colors painted on its wall along its surface. Like a projector, the glass wall projects the pink light toward the viewer's perspective.

Perception:

Immediately faced with equal proportions of materials and the pink square placed opposite him, the viewer can first note the symmetry in the proportions. As the viewer enters the space and allows his regard to shift to include the reflection of the color along the surface of the glass wall, the material on the left side of the booth suddenly becomes tinted by the pink color. In becoming aware of the shift, the viewer can detect the blue color, which also through reflection, colors the area of the booth just above the stacked materials.

Gestes et mesures à l'horizon des surfaces

March 22 - May 26, 2012

Galerie Jocelyn Wolff, Paris, France

press release:

Elodie Seguin
22 mars - 26 mai 2012
"gestes et mesures à l'horizon des surfaces"

Le Mauvais Vitrier
Charles Baudelaire

Il y a des natures purement contemplatives et tout à fait impropres à l'action, qui cependant, sous une impulsion mystérieuse et inconnue, agissent quelquefois avec une rapidité dont elles se seraient crues elles-mêmes incapables.

Tel qui, craignant de trouver chez son concierge une nouvelle chagrinante, rôde lâchement une heure devant sa porte sans oser rentrer, tel qui garde quinze jours une lettre sans la décacheter, ou ne se résigne qu'au bout de six mois à opérer une démarche nécessaire depuis un an, se sentent quelquefois brusquement précipités vers l'action par une force irrésistible, comme la flèche d'un arc. Le moraliste et le médecin, qui prétendent tout savoir, ne peuvent pas expliquer d'où vient si subitement une si folle énergie à ces âmes paresseuses et voluptueuses, et comment, incapables d'accomplir les choses les plus simples et les plus nécessaires, elles trouvent à une certaine minute un courage de luxe pour exécuter les actes les plus absurdes et souvent même les plus dangereux.

Un de mes amis, le plus inoffensif rêveur qui ait existé, a mis une fois le feu à une forêt pour voir, disait-il, si le feu prenait avec autant de facilité qu'on l'affirme généralement. Dix fois de suite, l'expérience manqua; mais, à la onzième, elle réussit beaucoup trop bien.

Un autre allumera un cigare à côté d'un tonneau de poudre, pour voir, pour savoir, pour tenter la destinée, pour se contraindre lui-même à faire preuve d'énergie, pour faire le joueur, pour connaître les plaisirs de l'anxiété, pour rien, par caprice, par désœuvrement.

C'est une espèce d'énergie qui jaillit de l'ennui et de la rêverie; et ceux en qui elle se manifeste si inopinément sont, en général, comme je l'ai dit, les plus indolents et les plus rêveurs des êtres.

Un autre, timide à ce point qu'il baisse les yeux même devant les regards des hommes, à ce point qu'il lui faut rassembler toute sa pauvre volonté pour entrer dans un café ou passer devant le bureau d'un théâtre, où les contrôleurs lui paraissent investis de la majesté de Minos, d'Éaque et de Rhadamante, sautera brusquement au cou d'un vieillard qui passe à côté de lui et l'embrassera avec enthousiasme devant la foule étonnée.

- Pourquoi? Parce que... parce que cette physionomie lui était irrésistiblement sympathique? Peut-être; mais il est plus légitime de supposer que lui-même il ne sait pas pourquoi.

J'ai été plus d'une fois victime de ces crises et de ces élans, qui nous autorisent à croire que des Démons malicieux se glissent en nous et nous font accomplir, à notre insu, leurs plus absurdes volontés.

Un matin je m'étais levé maussade, triste, fatigué d'oisiveté, et poussé, me semblait-il, à faire quelque chose de grand, une action d'éclat; et j'ouvris la fenêtre, hélas!

(Observez, je vous prie, que l'esprit de mystification qui, chez quelques personnes, n'est pas le résultat d'un travail ou d'une combinaison, mais d'une inspiration fortuite, participe beaucoup, ne fût-ce que par l'ardeur du désir, de cette humeur, hystérique selon les médecins, satanique selon ceux qui pensent un peu mieux que les médecins, qui nous pousse sans résistance vers une foule d'actions dangereuses ou inconvenantes.)

La première personne que j'aperçus dans la rue, ce fut un vitrier dont le cri perçant, discordant, monta jusqu'à moi à travers la lourde et sale atmosphère parisienne. Il me serait d'ailleurs impossible de dire pourquoi je fus pris à l'égard de ce pauvre homme d'une haine aussi soudaine que despotique.

"- Hé! hé!" et je lui criai de monter. Cependant je réfléchissais, non sans quelque gaieté, que, la chambre étant au sixième étage et l'escalier fort étroit, l'homme devait éprouver quelque peine à opérer son ascension et accrocher en maint endroit les angles de sa fragile marchandise.

Enfin il parut: j'examinai curieusement toutes ses vitres, et je lui dis: "Comment? vous n'avez pas de verres de couleur? des verres roses, rouges, bleus, des vitres magiques, des vitres de paradis? Impudent que vous êtes! vous osez vous promener dans des quartiers pauvres, et vous n'avez pas même de vitres qui fassent voir la vie en beau!" Et je le poussai vivement vers l'escalier, où il trébucha en grognant.

Je m'approchai du balcon et je me saisis d'un petit pot de fleurs, et quand l'homme reparut au débouché de la porte, je laissai tomber perpendiculairement mon engin de guerre sur le rebord postérieur de ses crochets; et le choc le renversant, il acheva de briser sous son dos toute sa pauvre fortune ambulatoire qui rendit le bruit éclatant d'un palais de cristal crevé par la foudre.

Et, ivre de ma folie, le lui criai furieusement: "La vie en beau! la vie en beau!"

Ces plaisanteries nerveuses ne sont pas sans péril, et on peut souvent les payer cher. Mais qu'importe l'éternité de la damnation à qui a trouvé dans une seconde l'infini de la jouissance?

August 11 - September 22, 2011

Abbaye aux Dames, Saintes, France

press release:

An exhibition of the works of four artists: Léna Hilton (painting), Bernard Heidsieck (sound poetry and collages), Elodie Seguin (painting, installations) and Anthony Croizet (photo montage).

Four artists in four very diverse modes of expression propose a visual and sound experience that extends over the peaceful atmosphere of the chapter room. Léna Hilton (painting), Bernard Heidsieck (sound poetry and collages), Elodie Seguin (painting, installations) and Anthony Croizet (photo montage) create an intergenerational collection which combines established and emerging artists.

Debout Derrière, Scène Ouverte

May 27 - June 30, 2011

Centre Culturel Français, Milan, Italy

Artist statement:

« J'ai choisi le titre de l'exposition : «Debout Derrière» en sous titre de l'évènement «Scène ouverte». L'intervention s'appuie sur la peinture de Léonard de Vinci «La Cène» qui se situe de l'autre coté de la rue, face au centre culturel. La particularité de cette peinture étant, entre autres, de jouer avec ses limites en se prolongeant dans l'espace du réfectoire qui la reçoit.

La configuration de la galerie du centre culturel faisant étonnamment échos à cet écran à l'intérieur d'un espace voûté, mon exposition proposera un parcours de volumes débutant par le point de vue de derrière la fenêtre qui se situe au fond de la fresque de Vinci.

Comment les media peuvent-ils se prolonger les uns dans les autres ? Je continue mes recherches autour de la limite, en questionnant la verticalité du plan de la peinture relativement à la position debout, à la stature de la sculpture et également en intégrant l'espace d'exposition à mes interventions. »

2001 - 2011 SOUDAIN DÉJA

October 20 - January 8, 2012

L'Ecole nationale supérieure des beaux-arts de Paris, Paris, France

Curated by Guillaume Désanges

press release:

2001-2011: SOUDAIN DEJA presents works by young artists who studied at the Ecole nationale supérieure des beaux-arts in the decade 2001-2011.

A selective retrospective of works by an generation of artists unlike any other. First, because symbolically they are the very first generation of the twenty-first century and thus, whether they like it or not, must assume the heroic mission of ushering artistic creation into a new century: the famous "two thousand," a change of millenium that was long the focus of projections and fantasies ranging from fear to high hopes. Second, because this generation's beginning was simultaneous with the initial event of a new era: the attacks of September 11, 2001, upset world order in a way we are as yet incapable of measuring.

It is of course hardly the purpose of art to systematically reflect a historical context, as it remains free of all external determinations, particularly symbolic ones. However, all of these young artists have studied, undertaken, constructed and forged a body of work inscribed in the fascinating process of globalization: internet, reshuffled geopolitical cards, uncertainty and the definitive end of utopia in the western world. A process that has included face transplants, the explosive rise of the neurosciences and contemporary art biennials, the war in Iraq, ecology. Not to mention the repressed return of the avant-gardes, the advent of production tools available to all, the sharing of knowledge.

The exhibition 2001-2011: SOUDAIN DEJA presents a selection of works by 30 artists who graduated from the Ecole in the new millenium, setting those works alongside the major events of this past decade. Not to illustrate current events by art works but rather to measure the gap between them, the deviant or alternative position that art may take in relation to contexts and events. To observe how art moves beyond those events, confronts or transforms them, slips their grip. How it sheds light on or complexifies them. These are two parallel histories, related to each other in by affinities, accident, coincidence, visual and thematic shocks.

It is thus along a chronological line that the exposition proceeds. A fixed line with which the works comes to associate themselves freely, some of their makers in the process of becoming, others already enjoying recognition.

Since it is always difficult to get distance on a contemporary generation and identify guiding ideas, the exhibition circumvents this stumbling block. Deliberately, exaggeratedly, it situates this generation within its time, at the core of a network of contemporary facts and situations. Not so much to create connections as to point up tensions, suggest alternative readings of the world by art and perhaps even of art by the world. Though the exhibition offers more an open-ended perspective than a retrospective assessment, it is also the occasion to salute the work of Henry-Claude Cousseau as director of the Ecole during this same decade, and the important reforms and changes the institution has undergone during this intense period, all aimed to modernize and internationalize, to open it still further to the world.

ELODIE SEGUIN

Le travail d'Elodie Seguin interroge en actes la représentation artistique dans son processus de production. Utilisant des matériaux pauvres et précaires, parfois trouvés, elle les agence avec une grande précision en fonction du contexte architectural, mais aussi culturel et symbolique, de l'espace d'exposition. En découle des compositions en devenir, en suspens, à la manière d'un croquis ou d'une esquisse en volume. Dans ses choix, la plasticité des formes, la construction de type architecturale et la couleur jouent un rôle majeur, chaque élément autonome entrant en dialogue avec les autres. Néanmoins, ses installations restent ouvertes, entre ordre et chaos, à la fois affirmées et fragiles, proliférantes et éphémères, proposant un temps d'observation aussi bien qu'un espace de réflexion. Comme souvent dans ses expositions, Elodie Seguin propose une production spécifique pour "2001-2011 : Soudain, déjà".

Villa Tokyo, Tokyo, Japan

press release:

In 2010 the Galerie Jocelyn Wolff introduced the work of Elodie Seguin, a very young artist who had just completed her studies at the Ecole de Beaux Arts de Paris.

Elodie Seguin proposes a reflection on painting itself. Formulated by the artist as “how to escape the tableau?”, this question develops in the gallery space through a process where the space eventually becomes one with the work of the artist. Asserted in a suspended state during the duration of the exhibition, the work appears as being in the becoming: like a sketch, a form, an outline where the continuity depends upon the will of the artist to continue. Each element is independent and in dialogue with the others, juxtaposed, and ready to enter in dialogue in another space where each's original form would again be lead to evolve and transform.

VILLA TOKYO is an international joint project involving ten European contemporary art galleries in cooperation with Japanese partners: the Taka Ishii Gallery, the Tomio Koyama Gallery and New Tokyo Contemporaries - an energetic association of seven contemporary art galleries In the heart of the Tokyo metropolis, in the developing Kyobashi area – a place with great potential to boost the artistic atmosphere – the galleries will share a building for a week-long program of exhibitions and many additional events: concerts, performances, screenings and formal and informal talks by Japanese and European artists and musicians.

Archivisions #2, poésie urbaine

October 14 - December 17, 2011

Centre d'Art Le Parvis, Tarbes, France

press release:

With works by: Chris Cornish, Alison Moffett, Elodie Seguin, Kirill Ukolov, Christoph Weber

Presenting a young generation of artists who use art itself as materials for the art in which they produce!

After the question of the city and its urban experiences, the second Archivision program questions our relationship with the space and our way of considering the crossing of two exhibitions presented simultaneously: Archivisions #2 and Honoré d'O.

In the center of art, Archivisions #2 regroups the works of these young artists: installation sculptures, paintings, videos, that challenge the space in all of its strange zones, their qualities and their faults: their form somewhat academic and very remote from "white cube" and far from the felt space of a museum!

About Painting

September 7 - 11, 2011

ABC Art Berlin Contemporary, Berlin, Germany, 2011

press release:

From 07 - 11 September 2011 ABC Art Berlin Contemporary will address the topic of painting. "About Painting" will survey contemporary painting practices, presenting not only works on paper or canvas, but also videos, photographs and sculptures that deal with the classical medium.

Twenty years ago, few exhibitions focused on painting specifically as the enduring influence of conceptual art tended to focus attention on issues of framing, rather than pictures. The legacy of these conceptual practices still looms large in contemporary art practices, including much recent painting, which is characterized by an intense reflection of the medium and its history. The combination of critical and at the same time confidence use of paint is a defining feature of a wide variety of current artistic practices that deal with pictures either on the wall, or in space.

The concept of the "painterly", as delineated by Heinrich Wölfflin as a specific art historical category over one hundred years ago, forms another source of interest in recent painting: "Painting is the triumph of appearance over the real," stated Wölfflin ("... der Triumph des Schein über das Sein." While this might sound like an endorsement of escapist décor, Wölfflin's motto does not promote deceptive forms of realism or allegory. Instead, the statement speaks positively to the unique ways in which painting traffics with ambiguity.

Alongside contemporary paintings and works "about painting" from different countries and generations, ABC will feature influential individual historical positions that build part of the subject's contextual background: painting as possibility, not as ideology.

Alongside contemporary paintings and works "About Painting" from different countries and generations, ABC will feature influential individual historical positions that build part of the subject's contextual background: painting as possibility, not as ideology.

The participating artists were selected under the curatorial guidance of Rita Kersting (former director of the Kunstverein für die Rheinlande und Westfalen), who, together with Marc Glode (film theorist and the curator of ABC 2010) designed the exhibition's spatial setting and presentation.

ABC Art Berlin Contemporary was founded four years ago as a new independent, hybrid exhibition format, between curated show and gallery event. The initiators, a group of Berlin galleries, have succeeded in establishing the exhibition as an important date in the international art calendar. ABC Art Berlin Contemporary opens on the 7th of September, 2011.

November 11 - December 23, 2010

Galerie Jocelyn Wolff, Paris, France

press release:

The idea for this exhibition came about in the mist of a discussion about the place Franz Erhard Walther should have occupied in the history of Conceptual as well as Preconceptual Art. Although it has been the subject of reevaluation during the last twenty years, Conceptual Art does prove to be more and more difficult to delimit, whether it be in chronological, geographical or esthetic terms. In line with Thierry de Duve, certain historians went as far as to say that it "didn't exist": "I would say there is no such thing as Conceptual art. It doesn't exist. It's just a name." Understandably, this difficulty reflects upon the study of its roots, which were often neglected or bypassed by the specialists, who were undoubtedly cautious of the idea of registering Conceptualism within the continuity or proximity of partially incompatible tendencies (Fluxus, Minimal Art, Concrete Poetry).

Taking into consideration the official chronology that makes the conceptual movement start in 1966 with the exhibition (Working Drawings and Other Visible Things on Paper notnecessarily meant to be Viewed as Art) curated by Mel Bochner at the School of Visual Arts in New York, the selected works and proposals for our exhibition date prior to this and always deal with one or some criteria that thereafter became inextricable from Conceptual Art. The importance the artists placed on processes (William Anastasi, Stanley Brouwn, Yoko Ono) and instructions (William Anastasi, Stanley Brouwn, Yoko Ono), on dematerialization (William Anastasi, George Brecht, John Cage) and tautology (William Anastasi, Peter Roehr), on questioning the author's status (Stanley Brouwn, Yoko Ono) and on language (George Brecht, Heinz Gappmayr, Peter Roehr, Franz Erhard Walther) indisputably announce the founding principles of Conceptualism. And if it is not about claiming that they adhere completely, the inherent prodromic dimension turns out to be convincing. In an effort to remain loyal to the mindset carried by a certain few of these works and to avoid any vintage qualities that could prove undermining, we decided to opt for the standpoint that consists in adapting them to contemporary technology. It is from within this perspective and following a conversation with William Anastasi that his two essential pieces (Sink and Microphone), whose conception dates the first third of the 1960s, became "updated". The integration of propositions from young artists (Guillaume Leblon, Elodie Seguin, Christoph Weber) from the gallery, which appear as veiled references to other, major, protoconceptual figures (respectively Yves Klein, the On Kawara before the date paintings, and Robert Morris), demonstrates how the after can take a critical look at the before in a way which is as singular as it is vitalizing.

Diplôme Elodie Seguin

L'Ecole nationale supérieure des beaux-arts de Paris, Paris, France

Texte Diplôme Elodie Seguin, Ecole des beaux-arts, 2009

My work can be described in two ways: from its moment in the studio/to its transition into the gallery. The boundaries are not sealed. There's a displacement from one context to another where the operations and sense change depending on the destination. This diploma took the form of a course, which attempts to signify the manner in which I do my work- it is not a roadblock but a three-way path, going from the studio to the gallery and passing by the university corridor. It does not change the gallery into a studio, since it would be wrong to transform the studio to an exhibition space, and the presence of these three places become directly effective to the possibility of this course.

The first moment is in the studio, a time for the attention to the shapes and colors as this laboratory allows the world to see these creations. With these sensitive experiments, it is not required to display these productions, where I am not obligated to make something that is unified with the others, where I am not obligated to provide works, where I can create elements that rest in a subjective state.

This practice is not entirely reliant on the production. This is the case with much of the practice, but in my case I want it to be a risk. This is not a romantic ethic but a method of work that creates potential. This is not a liberated activity because I understand how the exhibition space enters into the studio.

And it's this second moment, in which the object's destination is the transition, and the contextual displacement is applied to these subjective moments, in neutralizing the intimacy, the tools, and the materials. The presented elements are in state of shapes. The corridor includes the idea of transition and proposes a crossing plan.

The pieces are activated by their disposition.

For example, Le rouleau / 4 / is in profile, so that we can confuse the outline for the solid red on the edge of the paper to give the illusion of a continuing line. For the orange board in / 7 / the perspective is tested by the perception of the balance. The solid area is not a rectangle but a trapezoid; its limit becomes parallel to the wall by the displacement of the board, this being a possible piece to activate the work.

These works are illusions that show the temporality of the work, that are suspended in the time of the attachment, that are paused at the demonstration but without ever being stopped.

The pieces will be accomplished, but risk disappearing. They are fragile and in constant movement. In being interested in shapes in a sensitive manner, I create the subject economy. These shapes and ideas exchange their quality. Shapes that go against the idea and the ideas which tend to go towards shapes. The art has a physical mode of existence, it isn't so much of a requirement than a restraint applied to the emergence of a shape, simply everything is created in a logical manner of existence that is intrinsically linked.

To stop painting in the right place, and deciding to remove an outline or representation.

The ellipse that constitutes the drawing suffices in initiating a work so that the absence of certain traits signifies the others, relatively an illusion of the perspective.

A mass cut is suggested and seized.

The illusion of the continuity of a line so that it covers both surfaces are not on the same plane.

The multiple poses the problem of this statement, at first, that of the ready-mades of Duchamp.

The workshop space interests me in that it is an intermediate zone where things unfinished are stacked in a collage of compressed time frames, as shown in Mertzbau Schwitters.

Inexhaustibly, something that escapes, is developed, and is being rebuilt. The work is in the impossibility of any fence.

The incompleteness is in contrast to the expression of self, where empowerment is anonymous.

I wonder about the mode of existence of unfinished works, or those whose colors are extinguished by the darkness when no one is watching.

I keep a memory of an orange conserved by one of the grotto walls in Lascaux.

The first shapes that interested me were in Palermo, from Kelly, Max Bill, Lasker or the ones from Op art.

But the contents and the shape are different and yet the same in the work of art.

The worry is with the thoughts who have the biggest economy, so I try to extract them in order to be submissive to their existence.

With the smallest of means, producing the maximum should not effect the deviations. Not just the installations: the arrangements, and the devices that juxtapose the same plane on several layers of possible reception.

My research is often terminated before its completion, to show their incompleteness.

The sketch and the unfinished, the fragile and broken- these are not transitory moments but a display of transient time.

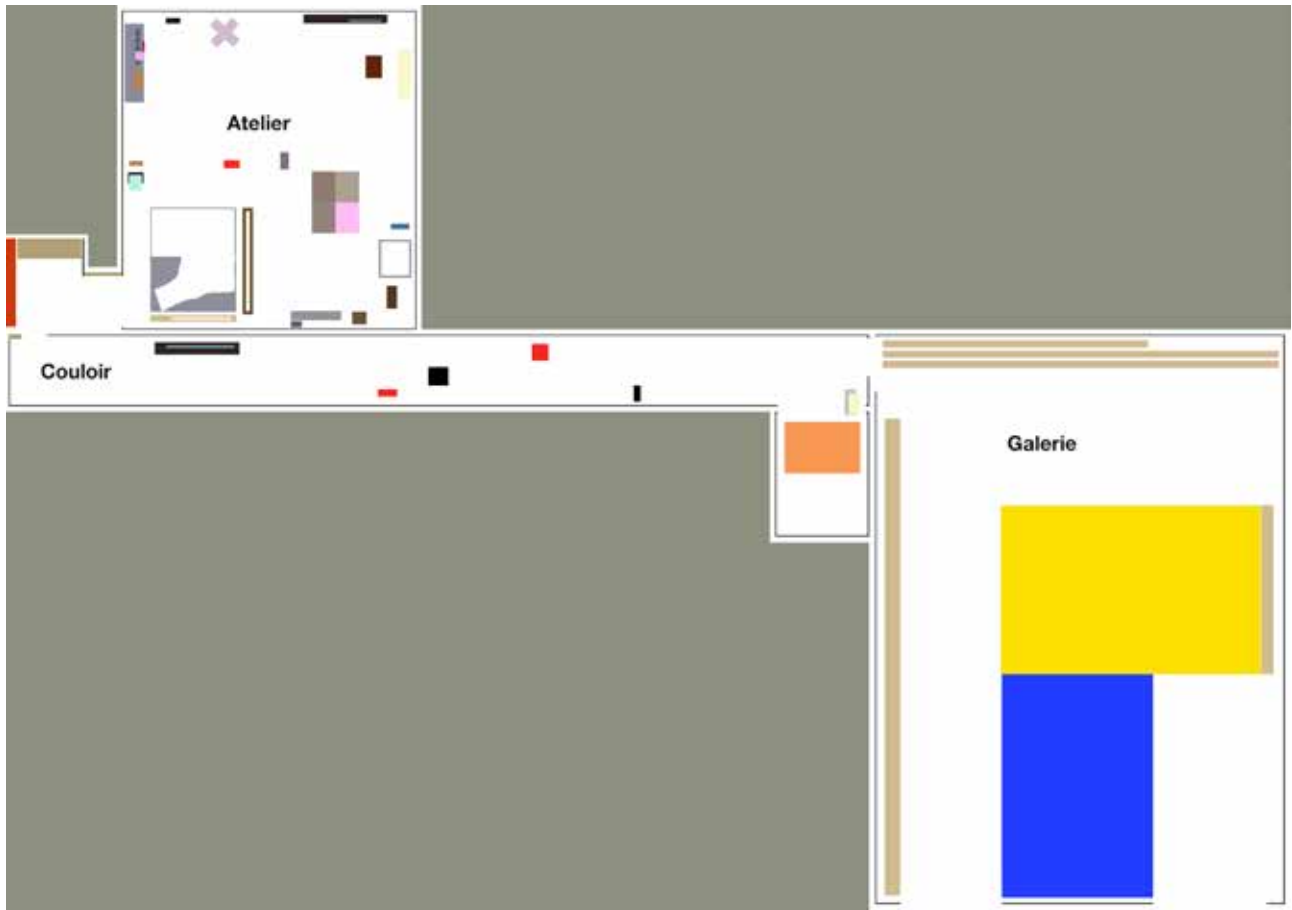

With a distrust in any final fulfillment, the attempt is only ambition.

There are many good reasons for not understanding my concepts.

The probability of meeting an element with another in the studio space at the moments of simple gestures, during the circulation of formats and tools at the moment of fabrication... A color that appears on the format with all of its properties with the application of the following that should define it and complete the drawing that had been in confrontation with, for example, the means of support.... This that I try to represent is already playing with the fabrication.

The tools have an analogue language so that when it deploys on the format, it is the perfect reduction. The roll of tape and its properties suffice in representing the function of the line that it must permit to create, but it equally becomes the absence. There must be two rolls of tape to create a line, and dialectically and thus the report outline/plan.

Also I use a drawing technique to show the measures and the multitude of information that it represents. Producing from transparence, a manner that is not finished, to show the work in progress, so that there are no illusions, are how to bring into play the dimension of the piece.
