CHRISTOPH WEBER

“Gegenstück series”

Jardin des Tuileries, Paris

18-23 October 2022 | Outdoors

As Christoph Weber once stated in an interview, he is “interested solely in concepts”. Be that as it may, the Austrian artist cannot be categorised as a conceptualist or classic conceptual artist. Rather, one might add, Weber is interested in transposing concepts, in a “methodological retracing” - as he himself defines his art strategy. A particularly striking amalgam of construction and deconstruction can be seen in Weber’s Untitled (Gegenstück) [= Untitled (Counterpart)]. Three massive, monolithic concrete slabs, divided from one another by a slender crack, force themselves into the path of the visitor. Central here is not a manifestation striving for depersonalised objectivity, but a facticity that themes artistic categories such as processuality, material, constitution and the physical presence of the “material” in space.

Pursuing her exploration of the heritage of Modernism, Isa Melsheimer looks at La Cité Radieuse (The Radiant City), Le Corbusier's urban utopia, which she considers from a particular angle. Imbued with an ideology of progress, the utopian city emanates from Le Corbusier's conceptual research, with the idea of the necessary renewal of the old city towards a new utilitarian city, governed by principles of mathematical circulation and a concentration of functions. Far from being an exclusive and universal model, Isa Melsheimer's theoretical vision takes up the concept as a space of collision, where buildings are invaded by plants and insects, and where the geometric proposal clashes with the organic nature of living things. For the first time, the artist presents us with an exhibition that is almost exclusively made up of ceramics, in the image of her current practice.

Isa Melsheimer grounds her reflections on the human, animal, botanical or built environments in the shadows and in the margins. She develops her sculptures by taking the time of work and the time of observation, as if to align herself with the thousand-year-old plants, such as the Welwitschia mirabilis from Namibia, that she seeks to represent - or reinterpret - in her ceramics Khurub and Onyanga.

The artist also speaks of ties between individuals and forms of life, ties that have been broken and deconstructed, envisaged or dispossessed. The Feston, inspired by the garlands connecting Portuguese houses, turn into long snakes on the ground, and their ostensibly monochrome colouring hides and reveals a plurality of tones. Just as the plants slowly and discreetly invade the space of the gallery, just as the ceramics transform human architecture into organic architecture, politics creeps into the spaces between the ceramics. The mesh of tiles in the artist's suspended pieces evokes the Portuguese azulejos which she came across during a residence in Lisbon, leading us into the architecture of everyday life. Embroidery on fabric at the entrance to the exhibition announces the fall of a proletarian utopia. Is this a warning or a fictional introduction? Neither: this piece is about the utopia carried by the SAAL project in Lisbon. As always with Isa Melsheimer, the work takes shape inside of history and architectural theory, thereby becoming a pretext for its study.

About the artist

Isa Melsheimer lives and works in Berlin. Drawing on the history of architecture and urban planning, the Berlin artist builds her work around human, animal and plant relationships, and their architectural and environmental expressions. Her practice spans painting, embroidery, sculpture, installation and botanical works, reflecting her documentary research and formal investigations. The artist's recent solo exhibitions include Concrete Bodies are Finite, at the Centre International d'art et du paysage, Île de Vassivière (2022), Compost at the MAMAC, Nice (2021-22), Der unerfreuliche Zustand der Textur (2020) at KINDL - Centre for Contemporary Art, Berlin, The Year of the Whale (2018) at Fogo Island Gallery, Fogo Island, Der tote Palast zitterte - zitterte! (2017) at Mies van der Rohe Haus, Berlin.

ARTISTS' NEWS IN PARIS

KATINKA BOCK

Les portes du jour - Group Show

Exhibition of the winners of the "1 % marché de l'art" Artistic Award
Musée Carnavalet

1 - 23 October 2022 | Tuesday - Saturday 10h - 18h

Entrance at the Orangerie 14 rue Payenne, 75003 Paris

The exhibition Les portes du jour [The Doors of the Day] has been designed as an open scenario, a script with no imposed outcome, allowing us to understand time and space in a different way. Five works by contemporary artists who have won the artistic Award «Prix 1 % marché de l'art» have been brought together for their shared perspicacity in thinking about the present, midway between utopia and dystopia. Different temporalities and realities - imaginary and physical, internal and external, local and global - coexist as so many oracles, as signs to be interpreted beyond any fixed certainty. A timeless, mythological and futuristic warrior welcomes the visitor. Imagined by Katinka Bock, her name is Amnesia. Marie-Claire Messouma Manlanbien weavings and ceramics, powerful symbols marking the entrance into parallel realities, intersperse the adjacent space. Nearby, cultural and industrial objects are turned to stone by Isabelle Cornaro, in the heart of a meaningful monochrome horizontality. Further on, Ariane Loze orchestrates an immersion into the metaverse, an algorithmic comedy projecting a world that is on the verge of coming into being. Finally, across the street, Renaud Auguste-Dormeuil's wooden signpost, seemingly washed up from a Venetian lagoon, announces an apocalypse that we still hope to avoid. The Doors of the Day, which are also those of perception, are open to anyone willing to walk through them.

Opening by invitation only : October 14, 2022

Francisco Tropa's practice is essentially oriented towards sculpture, often complemented by photographic or film images. His work interweaves references to antiquity, science and technology, and the history of art. The artwork therefore takes the form of an investigation aimed at dissecting the act of creation. The exhibition Le Poumon et le cœur («The Lung and the Heart») seeks to give shape to the creative principles that define life, the workings of the world and living things.
