For this year's edition of Artissima, we're presenting a selection of works that revolve around the idea of jungle in its multiple meanings and connotations. Namely, the jungle as an area of dense tropical vegetation and as ruthless human habitat typical for big cities, are both considered as such in our choice of works. However, we're also attentive to the way the latter tend to enter the space of the former. In the photographic series of works Paradiso created by Diego Bianchi, the industrial substitute intrudes in the area of wild nature. His sculptural creations presenting mutated human bodies, becoming a hybrid of human flesh and everyday utilitarian objects, also participate in his ongoing reflection on our relation to things and nature. Isa Melsheimer is also one of the artists whose work demonstrates a deep reflection on the Western colonisation of nature be it in scientific, cultural or industrial terms. Following this same axis, we're also presenting on our booth a piece by William Anastasi, which by the use of the camouflage pattern brings a new understanding on the notions of mimicry and mise en abyme, at the core of his whole work. Irene Kopelman and her scientific approach will also bring some new perspectives and blur once and for all the borders between the academical and the aesthetical. Santiago de Paoli's works, on the other hand, complete our selection by his anthropomorphic vision of nature, enhancing the unity between human and his natural environment in an ironic way.

We're also delighted to invite the two Italian artists Hilario Isola and Enrico Ascoli to participate in our curated Artissima showcase. For this particular occasion we'll present a sound sculpture of the pair.
